

Social and Personal

Miss Leslie C. Foster will leave today at noon for her home in Leesburg, after spending several weeks with Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Francis Green, on West Franklin Street. Miss Foster was the honor guest at many charming affairs during her stay in Richmond.

Bowles-Hanckel.
An out-of-town wedding of Richmond interest was that of Miss Ida Louise Macoun Hanckel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louise Trappman Hanckel, to Harry Thornton Bowles, which took place Wednesday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock in the Episcopal Church, Charlottesville. Miss Hanckel is well known in this city, where she has frequently visited.

Christ Church was beautifully decorated for the occasion, and a color scheme of green and white was carried out. The ushers were Frederick H. Brooke, of Washington, D. C.; Charles H. Wells, Jr., of Scranton, Pa.; Arthur M. McGee, of Philadelphia, Pa.; Ordway Preston, of Washington, D. C.; Brewer Corcoran, of Springfield, Mass.; and J. Stuart and William C. Hanckel, brothers of the bride. The bridesmaids were Suzanne Hanckel and Virginia King, who immediately preceded the bride. They were met at the altar steps by the bridegroom and his brother, John Ed. Bowles, of New York, who acted as best man. The Rev. H. B. Lee, D. D., performed the ceremony.

Dr. and Mrs. Bowles left on a late northbound train for a brief wedding trip, upon their return will make their home at the bridegroom's farm on Hancock's Mountain, east of Charlottesville.

Mr. Bowles is a member of one of the oldest and most prominent of the families of Springfield, Mass. His father, Dr. S. W. Bowles, was one of the leading physicians of Western New England, and a man of unusual prominence in his community. All but one of the out-of-town ushers were fellow-members of Skull and Bones at Yale.

Among the out-of-town guests were: Mrs. Ed. Gilmore, of Swickley, Pa.; Stephen Wallace Bowles, of New York, eldest brother of the bridegroom; Miss Elizabeth B. Bowles, sister of the bridegroom; Colonel E. C. Thompson, of New Haven; Russell S. B. Bate, of New York; Mrs. Ord. Preston, of Washington, D. C.; and Mrs. Brewer Corcoran, of Springfield, Mass.

Christie Miller Recital.
The first of the musical teas at the Jefferson took place Wednesday at 4 o'clock, the recital being given by Miss Christine Miller, contralto, with Blanche Sanders Walker at the piano. It was in every way one of the most charming musical events of the season in Richmond. The idea itself is a novel and delightful one, the informal placing of the chairs in groups, the program of the highest artistic excellence.

and the serving of tea afterward, together with the opportunity afforded of meeting artists whose reputation is national, makes them interesting beyond the usual cut-and-dried musical affairs.

The program Wednesday consisted of four groups of songs and one piano group. Miss Miller has a charm of dramatic interpretation, and a voice of unusual richness and dramatic power.

Her first group of German songs were given authoritative readings, the dramatic interpretation given to the song cycle, "Idylls of the South Sea," by Charles Wakenfield Cadmon, which was written for Miss Miller.

Of the last group, "Nocturne," by Krumer, also written for Miss Miller, was sung with much tonal and interpretative beauty. "The Eagle," by Grant Schaefer, being a gem, and an impressive medium for displaying the deep richness of her voice.

The audience demanded two encores, graciously responded to by Miss Miller at the conclusion of the program; "Song of the Evening," by Harriet Ware, and "Gae the Sleep," by F. J. F. F.

The accompaniments were played by Mrs. Walker in a sympathetic and satisfying manner. She also played a number of numbers with good style and a brilliant technique.

The program next Wednesday at 4 o'clock will be given by David and Clara Manner, violin and piano. These two are under the direction of Mrs. Wilson-Greene, of Washington, D. C., and have been arranged for here by Mrs. Channing M. Ward.

At the Tea Room.
Misses Mary Harris and Nellie Tompkins were the hostesses at the Tea Room at the Jefferson yesterday afternoon. The tables were arranged with pink and white tulips, and quite a number of people dropped in for tea. The hostesses this afternoon are Mrs. Godwin Boykin and Miss Nan Lindsey.

Southern Society Ball.
The Southern Society of New York will give its annual Dixie Dinner and dance at the Hotel Astor on the evening of Thursday, February 20. This event is one of the principal affairs of the winter social season, and always brings out, in large numbers, those Southerners who now make their homes in New York, in addition to many visitors from the South. Officers of the various State societies are also invited to call the roll of the States and in response to have the president of each society make a short speech. This year, however, formal speech-making will be dispensed with so that the room may be cleared at an early hour for the dancers.

Under the presidency of Walter L. McCorkle the Southern Society of New York has made rapid progress within the last year. It has increased its resident membership and has also taken in quite a number of honorary members, who live outside the city. Other officers of the society are: vice-president, George Gordon Battle; secretary, Thomas S. Fuller; treasurer, William D. Rucker.

Mrs. Lamar Entertains.
Mrs. William Bailey Lamar entertained a party at the New National Theatre in Washington in honor of Mrs. Henry D. Clayton's house guest, Mrs. John Downing, of Georgetown, Ky. The other guests were Mrs. Claude Swanson, Mrs. George W. Fairchild, and Mrs. Frank Clark, of Florida.

Says an exchange.
Mrs. Francis M. Jencks gave a beautiful luncheon Wednesday afternoon at her home, 1 West Mount Vernon Place, in honor of Mrs. Henry Wood and her sister, Baroness von Kretschman of Germany. Mrs. Jencks's other guests were Mrs. Frank Sherwood Hambleton, Mrs. John Gill, Jr., Mrs. William Wallace Spence, Jr., Mrs. John Henderson Stewart, Mrs. Edward Shoemaker, Miss Dawson and Miss Elizabeth C. Jencks.

An engagement of interest just announced is that of Miss Barbara Fitch White, daughter of Mrs. Gideon White, of 315 St. Paul Street, to Samuel Rixey Chamberlaine, of Baltimore, son of Joseph Chamberlaine and the late Mrs. Chamberlaine, of Talbot County, Maryland. The wedding will take place after Easter. Miss White's mother and her sister, Miss Eleanor White, will sail shortly after the wedding for Europe, where they will travel until late next fall.

At its meeting here Tuesday, the board of visitors of William and Mary College decided to hold another summer session next year, and the place and details were left to the faculty.

The first summer session was held at Dublin, and it is more than likely that the board will hold it in the same place. The board also voted to place W. H. Keeble, of the department of physics, a year's vacation to complete his work for the Ph. D. degree at the University of Chicago. A checkbook will have charge of this department upon Mr. Keeble's departure.

LAD RUN OVER BY STREET CAR.
Dies Several Hours Later as Result of Unavoidable Accident.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.) Durham, N. C., February 13.—Leonard Hopson, eleven years old, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Hopson, of East Durham, died last night at the Watts Hospital as the result of being run over by one of the street cars on Driver Avenue, in East Durham, yesterday afternoon about 4 o'clock. His death was of such a nature that there was little hope of his recovery from the time he was hurt. One leg was nearly cut off, being broken at the thigh and the bones left protruding through the flesh. The right hand was badly mashed, and one foot was mashed to a pulp. Despite these fearful injuries, the lad did not lose consciousness from the time of the injury until his death. He suffered from a long agony. Witnesses say that the accident was unavoidable. Young Hopson was riding a bicycle, and attempted to cross the street in front of himself along by the side of the fast running car. His bicycle struck a rock or rut, and he lost his balance and fell in front of the car. It was impossible for the motorist to stop before the car had run completely over his body.

Yesterday afternoon little John McCown, on Mangum Street, was playing with an old gun barrel, putting powder in the muzzle and then firing it off. The youngster was assisted in the operation by two other boys. He finally put in an overcharge, and the gun barrel burst. Pieces of the steel hit the little fellow on the chin and part of his face. A physician was hastily summoned. To-day he is doing as well as could be expected.

FARMERS' SCHOOL OPENS.
Commissioner Kolner Predicts Great Future for Rockingham.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.) Harrisonburg, Va., February 13.—The annual Farmers' School, the second ever held, opened this morning at 10 o'clock, in Assembly Hall, and will last through to-morrow.

G. W. Kolner, Commissioner of Agriculture, today made the prediction that agricultural lands in Rockingham County would double in value in the next ten years, due to the increase in population and the number of people who would come to the county. He extended this prediction to Virginia as a whole. Scientific farming is gaining. Twelve years ago Mr. Kolner said he received 500 letters from farmers. Last year he received 18,000. Improvement of the soil and the building of the soil are two factors making for the farmer's benefit.

Dr. Stabler, of the Department of Agriculture, also addressed the farmers. Several professors from Blacksburg will speak to-morrow.

EMPEROR PROMOTES HIS SON TO COLONEL

Crown Prince Jumps Intervening Rank of Lieutenant-General.

BY LA MARQUE DE FONTENAY.
EMPEROR WILLIAMS long delayed promotion of his eldest son, and heir from the rank of major to that of colonel, has served to call attention to the fact that the crown prince has jumped the intervening rank of lieutenant-colonel. This intentional and in accordance with time-honored tradition and custom in the reigning house of Prussia. When Frederick the Great, as Crown Prince of Prussia, was arrested as a deserter and subsequently commuted in deference to the peremptory demands of the ambassadors of Germany, France, Great Britain and Russia, to imprisonment in the fortress of Kustrin, the royal captive held the rank of lieutenant-colonel. From that time forth, no son of the sovereign house of Prussia has ever held a commission as such. Its members, when they have served sufficiently long as majors, are always promoted directly to a full colonelcy.

Lord Armstrong, ever since his financial troubles three years ago, has ceased to have any connection whatsoever with the great Elswick iron works, founded by his grand-uncle, the first Lord Armstrong, and which have often been described as the English Krupps. The press on both sides of the Atlantic is therefore laboring under a misapprehension in attributing to the young Lord Armstrong, as being those of the eldest son and heir of Lord Armstrong, chief owner of the steel works and shipbuilding yards at Elswick. Young Armstrong, who is a member of Trinity College, Cambridge, has imbibed, like so many callow youths at the universities, immature, half-baked views on social and industrial conditions, and has been radicalized by the advanced theories of socialism, which by sufficient proof of ill-will towards the concern and a proof that neither he nor his father are any longer connected therewith.

The present Lord Armstrong, owing to foolish speculations, entirely wrecked the very large fortune which he had inherited from his grand-uncle, the first Lord Armstrong, and as mentioned above, three years ago was obliged to completely sever his connection with the iron works, to sell all his household furniture, pictures, carriages and horses, etc., and to effect a compromise with his long list of creditors, who included a number of well-known London money-lenders and usurers, among them being James Wither, of Fleet Street.

The late Lord Armstrong, the founder of the Elswick iron works, which, like the Krupps in Germany, turned out not only iron and steel, but heavy ordnance, armor plate for land and sea, and for ships, and which likewise has built a number of ironclads for the British navy and for foreign powers, was not a self-made man in the sense that he was of humble origin. For his father was the wealthy iron merchant of Newcastle-on-Tyne, and served a number of terms of office as mayor of that city. Yet old Lord Armstrong never claimed any ancestors, nor added any gems of mythical genealogy to the pages of Burke devoted to his name. His shield and supporters bear reference only to his trade, the supporters being two stalwart smiths with huge sledge hammers, while the motto "Fortis in armis" (Strong in arms) is an allusion to his name and to the excellence of his artillery, is probably the most appropriate to be found in the entire records of the Royal College of Heraldry. He was created a peer of the realm in 1856, and was knighted at Victoria's Golden Jubilee in 1887, and died without issue in 1900, when his barony became extinct. All his affections were centered in his grand-nephew, William Watson, to whom he bequeathed his entire fortune, his jointly stock in the great Elswick iron works and ship yards, as well as his country seat of Cragisleigh, near Rothbury, and Bamburgh Castle, a grand old place in a beautiful spot in Northumberland.

The late Lord Armstrong's only sister married Sir William Watson, Judge of the Exchequer, and a veteran of the Peninsular War and of the battle of Waterloo. His son was John Watson, who in his early years was a civil engineer, who three years ago, after the death of his grand-uncle, had the latter's peerage revived in his favor by the Unionist government.

Lord Armstrong is a man of about 40 years of age, of a commanding figure, which of course indicates that in politics he is a Conservative, is married to a daughter of the late Sir John Adye, of Tel-el-Kehir celebrity, and has two children, the eldest of them, Lord Henry Armstrong, who is now the one who has just come out with his profession of socialism.

Rowland Allanson Winn, who has just succeeded to the three Irish peerages, and who, owing to his cousin, Lord Headley, is a notable sportsman, who when at the Cambridge University won the middle and heavy-weight championships at boxing, and has written several standard works on the art of self-defense, is a civil engineer, who is recognized as an authority on harbor construction and in the protection and improvement of foreshores, and has, indeed, been a designer and the author of most of the foreshore protection works on the coasts of Ireland and Great Britain. He is married, has four sons, and is well off, not only by inheritance, but also thanks to the handsome income which he derives from his profession. In this respect he will be distinctly more fortunate than his predecessor in the title.

The late Lord Headley, although possessed of some 16,000 acres of land in Ireland, was, owing to his impoverished condition of his property, so hard up at times that at one period of his life he was reduced positively to being without shelter and obliged to take his night's rest in the open air, on the seats of the Thames, and in the streets of London. He was of a most adventurous disposition, spent much time prospecting in Montana, Idaho, Wyoming and other Western States, also in the Northwest of Canada, and served with the French Canadian War in the staff of General von Goeben. He also fought beside the late Lord Ashburnham—who has also just been gathered to his fathers—for Don Carlos, in the Carlist wars forty years ago.

At one time, round about 1892, he was missing for two years in Central Africa. He had started out north of the Zambesi on a shooting expedition consisting of but six people besides himself, narrowly escaping being eaten by cannibals, penetrated regions where no white man had ever set foot before, killed with his own gun no less than eighteen rhinoceros, several elephants and a dozen lions, and then unexpectedly reappeared to take his seat, as eddy, on the banks of the Thames, in a comfortable and well-furnished house. If nothing had happened, as a representative peer of Ireland in the House of Lords. He was a cheery looking, fresh colored man, with white hair and mustache, not very tall, but of some build and slightly fat.

Some time ago he sold his Irish estates to the tenants, under the terms of the land act, but owing to their being so heavily mortgaged, did not obtain much money therefrom. What little he had is left to his widow, an invalid, and to his daughter, Mrs. Jones Llewellyn. The peerages, all of them Irish, were created by King George III., and the baronetcy by Charles II.
